INTRODUCTION¹

1
2 In Rust v. Sullivan, 500 U.S. 173 (1991), the Supreme Court held that 3 Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) regulations (1988 regulations) 4 prohibiting Title X projects from referring patients for abortion as a method of 5 family planning, and requiring Title X programs to be physically separate from 6 abortion-related activities, were authorized by Title X, were not arbitrary and 7 capricious, and were constitutional. Relying on that holding, HHS issued a new 8 rule in 2019 that is, in all material respects, indistinguishable from the 1988
9 regulations. See 84 Fed. Reg. 7714 (Mar. 4, 2019) (Rule). Notwithstanding Rust's 10 holding, Plaintiffs bring this suit asserting that the current Rule, inter alia, violates 11 Title X, is arbitrary and capricious, and violates the Constitution. As Defendants 12 explained in their opening brief and, earlier, in opposition to Plaintiffs' motion for 13 a preliminary injunction, these claims fail and the Court should enter summary 14 judgment for Defendants. See Defs.' Mem. in Supp. of Mot. to Dismiss & for 19 motion to expand the page limits did not give the Court time to rule before

6 to Defs.’ Mot. to Dismiss & for Summ. J & Cross-Mot. for Summ J. (NFPRHA 7 MSJ), ECF No. 121, Plaintiffs double down on the remarkable arguments they 8 asserted when seeking a preliminary injunction: that this Court can effectively 9 overrule a Supreme Court decision based on a single clause in an appropriations 10 rider, an obscure provision in the Affordable Care Act (ACA), or later Supreme 11 Court cases reaffirming the decision; and that the Court can substitute its judgment 12 for the predictive expertise of the agency charged with administering the Title X 13 program. As set forth below and in Defendants’ opening brief, Plaintiffs’ 14 arguments fail, and the Court should enter summary judgment for Defendants on 15 all claims asserted in Plaintiffs’ complaints.

16 Plaintiffs also spend many pages—and, indeed, the bulk of their combined 17 150 pages of briefing—in an ultimately futile attempt to demonstrate that HHS
18 acted arbitrarily and capriciously, and Plaintiffs have combed the record to cite 19 commenters who supported their position during the rulemaking process. But the 20 length of Plaintiffs’ briefs does not make their arguments stronger, nor make it 21 any more acceptable, as Plaintiffs appear to believe, for this Court to “substitute 22 its judgment for that of the agency.” Peck v. Thomas, 697 F.3d 767, 772 (9th Cir.

1 2012). It is black letter law that courts are not permitted to do so under the 2 Administrative Procedure Act (APA). Because HHS provided a reasoned 3 justification for the regulations it adopted over the objections of Plaintiffs (and 4 some other commenters), and made reasonable predictions using its expertise, 5 Plaintiffs' arbitrary-and-capricious claims fail. Plaintiffs fare no better in arguing 6 that certain aspects of the Rule are not logical outgrowths of HHS's proposals in 7 the NPRM, as Plaintiffs received sufficient notice to meaningfully comment on 8 the substance of the Rule as promulgated.

9 Finally, Plaintiffs barely defend their constitutional claims, and suggest that 10 the Court need not reach them. Understandably so, as these claims lack merit for 11 the simple reason that they are foreclosed by Rust, which already held that 12 materially indistinguishable regulations do not violate the Constitution under the 13 theories that Plaintiffs pursue here.

14 I. PLAINTIFFS' STATUTORY CLAIMS LACK MERIT

15 Plaintiffs continue to press the argument that the Rule violates Title X itself 16 and two later-enacted statutory provisions. But as Defendants have explained, the 17 Supreme Court has held that Title X authorizes materially indistinguishable 18 regulations. Plaintiffs' attempt to show that this authorization has been silently 19 repealed is inconsistent with the text of the relevant statutes and fails to meet the 20 high standard necessary to overcome the presumption against implied repeals.

21 A. The Nondirective Provision

22

1 Title X plainly authorizes the Rule’s restrictions on referrals and 2 counseling. If a program refers patients for, or otherwise promotes, abortion as a 3 method of family planning, then the program is one “where abortion is a method 4 of family planning” and, hence, ineligible for funding under § 1008. 42 U.S.C.
5 § 300a-6; see 84 Fed. Reg. at 7759. Plaintiffs suggest that § 1008 merely prohibits 6 “funding abortion,” Wash. MSJ at 6, but even the 2000 regulations concluded that 7 is “not . . . the better reading.” 65 Fed. Reg. 41,270, 41,272 (July 3, 2000)
8 (preamble). After all, when Congress wants to prevent only the funding of 9 abortion, it knows how to do so. See Pub. L. No. 96-123, § 109, 93 Stat. 923, 926 10 (1979) (“[N]one of the funds provided by this joint resolution shall be used to 11 perform abortions.”). Section 1008, by contrast, reveals “Congress’ intent in Title 12 X that federal funds not be used to ‘promote or advocate’ abortion as a ‘method 13 of family planning.’” Rust, 500 U.S. at 195 n.4.

14 All of this remains true notwithstanding a subsequent appropriations rider 15 providing that Title X funds “shall not be expended for abortions” and that “all 16 pregnancy counseling shall be nondirective.” Pub. L. No. 115-245, div. B., tit. II, 17 132 Stat. 2981, 3070-71 (2018). If anything, that rider reinforces § 1008 by 18 further ensuring that pregnancy counseling is not used to “direct” patients toward 19 abortion. Plaintiffs’ contrary arguments do not withstand scrutiny.

20 1. Plaintiffs’ primary argument is that the Rule’s restrictions on 21 abortion referrals are directive (in violation of the appropriations rider) when 22 combined with the separate requirement that pregnant patients be referred for

1 prenatal health care. See Wash. MSJ at 46-48. But the prenatal-referral 2 requirement does not direct a decision about abortion—it merely refers women
3 for care while they are pregnant, even if they obtain an abortion later. See Defs.’
4 MSJ at 20. And the Rule permits providers to explain that abortion is outside the 5 scope of the program, and that if a patient wants to seek an abortion, she can find 6 information about that elsewhere. In the meantime, however, it permits providers 7 to give the patient a list of providers who can offer her care while she is pregnant.
8 See 42 C.F.R. § 59.14(e)(5). Providers could even include an express disclaimer 9 that the prenatal-care referral is a general requirement and should not be taken as 10 directing the patient’s ultimate decision about her pregnancy. And even if the 11 required prenatal-care referral were directive, that would not justify invalidating 12 the prohibition on abortion referrals, which are contained in different subsections, 13 42 C.F.R. §§ 59.16(a), 59.16(b)(1), and, as Defendants have explained, are 14 severable, Defs.’ MSJ at 20 (citing 84 Fed. Reg. at 7725).

15 In any event, Congress’s requirement that “pregnancy counseling” be 16 “nondirective” does not speak to the issue of “referrals,” much less require HHS 17 to allow referrals for abortion specifically. Plaintiffs insist that in passing the 18 appropriations rider, Congress must have intended “counseling” to refer to 19 “referrals” as well, relying heavily on a separate statute’s—the Infant Adoption 20 Awareness Act, see Wash. MSJ at 47—use of those terms. But that statute just 21 requires the Secretary to make grants to “adoption organizations for the purpose 22 of developing and implementing programs to train the designated staff of eligible

1 health centers in providing adoption information and referrals to pregnant women 2 on an equal basis with all other courses of action included in nondirective
3 counseling to pregnant women.” 42 U.S.C. § 246(a)(1). Plaintiffs read the statute 4 as indicating that “referrals” are “inclu[ded] . . . within ‘nondirective counseling,’” 5 Wash. MSJ at 49, but the term “included” instead modifies the “other courses of 6 action” potentially addressed in pregnancy counseling—namely, abortion or 7 carrying to term. This statute has no bearing on whether Congress considers 8 referrals a type of counseling (as opposed to something that may occur at the same 9 time as counseling).

10 2. Plaintiffs’ challenge to the Rule’s counseling provisions fares no 11 better. Given that the Rule permits “nondirective pregnancy counseling, which 12 may discuss abortion,” 42 C.F.R. § 59.14(e)(5), Plaintiffs focus on the fact that 13 the Rule does not require counseling on abortion. Wash. MSJ at 51-52. But in 14 providing that “all pregnancy counseling shall be nondirective, the appropriations 15 rider does not require any pregnancy counseling at all—especially in a 16 “preconceptional family planning program” such as Title X, Rust, 500 U.S. at 17 202. Nor does a provider’s choice to omit counseling about abortion specifically 18 “direct” anything. The Rule’s preamble contemplates that any counseling will 19 present more than one option, see, e.g., 84 Fed. Reg. at 7716, and offering 20 childbirth-only counseling or adoption-only counseling would not “direct” a 21 patient to choose that option, so long as the provider did not advise a patient to do 22 so. At most, such counseling would (implicitly) “promote” that option over the

1 others, but nothing in the appropriations rider prohibits the promotion of childbirth 2 or adoption. Section 1008, by contrast, does prohibit the use of Title X funds “to 3 ‘promote or advocate’ abortion as a ‘method of family planning,’” Rust, 500 U.S.
4 at 195 n.4, which is why the Rule forbids counseling where “abortion [is] the only 5 option presented,” 84 Fed. Reg. at 7747.

6 In short, the Rule is consistent with the nondirective provision, and it is 7 possible to give it effect while also (unlike Plaintiffs) giving effect to the 8 interpretation of Title X (and specifically § 1008) upheld in Rust.²

9 3. Even if this were a closer question, settled interpretive principles 10 would dispose of Plaintiffs’ construction of the appropriations rider. Plaintiffs do 11 not dispute that there is a heightened presumption against implied repeals through 12 appropriations legislation, see Defs.’ MSJ at 19, but contend that the presumption 13 is inapplicable here. Yet they confirm that, under Plaintiffs’ interpretation, the 14 nondirective provision “narrowed” the agency’s authority to interpret (and, thus, 15

16 ² Plaintiffs are thus incorrect in accusing Defendants of reading the 17 nondirective provision to have “no legal effect.” Wash. MSJ at 48; see also id. at 18 42-43. The Rule prohibits abortion referrals to individuals or entities outside of 19 the Title X program, consistent with § 1008, while requiring, consistent with the 20 text of the nondirective provision, that any pregnancy counseling that is provided 21 within the Title X program (including counseling on abortion) be nondirective.
22 See 84 Fed. Reg. at 7730.

1 act pursuant to) § 1008. See Wash. MSJ at 45. By definition, that is a repeal of 2 § 1008 in relevant respect. See Nat’l Ass’n of Home Builders v. Defs. of Wildlife, 3 551 U.S. 644, 663 n.8 (2007) (“Every amendment of a statute effects a partial 4 repeal to the extent that the new statutory command displaces earlier, inconsistent 5 commands.”).

6 If § 1008 explicitly delegated HHS authority “to prohibit Title X projects 7 from referring their patients for abortion as a method of family planning,” for 8 instance, no one would dispute that subsequent legislation stripping the 9 Department of that authority would constitute a repeal. That § 1008, combined 10 with the express rulemaking authority granted under § 1006, implicitly delegated 11 the same authority is irrelevant under Chevron. See Defs.’ MSJ at 27-28. And 12 that is especially true where the Supreme Court has already authoritatively 13 construed § 1008 to contain that delegation, a scenario none of Plaintiffs’ 14 authorities address. See Antonin Scalia & Brian A. Garner, Reading Law 331 15 (2012) (noting that even when an “earlier ambiguous provision has already been 16 construed by the jurisdiction’s high court to have a meaning that does not fit as 17 well with a later statute as another meaning,” any “[l]egislative revision of law 18 clearly established by judicial opinion ought to be by express language or by 19 unavoidably implied contradiction”).

20 B. Section 1554 of the ACA

21 1. Plaintiffs do not dispute that they failed to raise their argument based 22 on § 1554 of the ACA before HHS during the rulemaking process. Rather, they

1 ask the Court to excuse that waiver for a variety of reasons, none of them
2 persuasive. It is not enough, as Plaintiffs contend, that commenters made generic 3 objections to the substance of (as opposed to the statutory authorization for) the 4 Rule containing language that happened to resemble language in § 1554. See 5 Wash. MSJ at 56-57. Nor is it the case that the waiver doctrine is inapplicable to 6 arguments regarding “statutory limitations” on an agency’s “rulemaking 7 authority.” Id. at 55-56. Rather, as the D.C. Circuit has explained, “failure to 8 raise a particular question of statutory construction before an agency constitutes 9 waiver of the argument in court,” notwithstanding the fact that a party raised other 10 “technical, policy, or legal arguments before the agency,” because “respect for 11 agencies’ proper role in the Chevron framework requires that the court be 12 particularly careful to ensure that challenges to an agency’s interpretation of its 13 governing statute are first raised in the administrative forum.” NRDC, Inc. v. EPA, 14 25 F.3d 1063, 1074 (D.C. Cir. 1994) (citations omitted); see also Koretoff v.
15 Vilsack, 707 F.3d 394, 398 (D.C. Cir. 2013) (requiring a party to raise “specific 16 argument” it presses in court before the agency, “not merely the same general 17 legal issue”); Defs. MSJ at 29-30.³ Plaintiffs do not argue that any of the

18 _____
19 ³ For the same reasons, the fact that HHS listed the entire ACA as a source 20 that it relied upon in promulgating the Rule, see Wash. MSJ at 54, does not mean 21 that it considered the particular statutory argument that Washington is making 22 here (but that was not raised in any comments)—i.e., that the Rule violates the

1 | comments it references actually invoked § 1554, or more importantly invoked that
2 | particular statutory provision as a legal bar to the Rule, and thus HHS had no
3 | “opportunity to consider the issue.” Portland Gen. Elec. Co. v. Bonneville Power
4 | Admin., 501 F.3d 1009, 1024 (9th Cir. 2007).

5 | Washington further argues that, because the Rule is currently in effect and
6 | “has been applied to Washington,” it should now be permitted to raise any
7 | argument it wants, “irrespective of what arguments were raised during the notice-
8 | and-comment process.” Wash. MSJ at 57. But although Washington
9 | misleadingly tries to suggest otherwise, the state’s voluntary departure from the 10 | Title X program does not mean it was “subject to” an enforcement action, id., and
11 | this lawsuit is not, in fact, an as-applied challenge to a specific HHS action
12 | enforcing the Rule against Washington.⁴ Rather, Washington contends, as it has

13 | _____
14 | obscure “Access to therapies” provision of that voluminous legislation—much
15 | less that Plaintiffs’ waiver should be excused on that basis. See Koretoff, 707 F.3d
16 | at 398 (“[A]gencies have no obligation to anticipate every conceivable argument
17 | about why they might lack statutory authority.”)

18 | ⁴ Indeed, although the Rule has not been applied to Washington (which,
19 | again, chose to leave the Title X program on its own), HHS does employ
20 | enforcement proceedings with respect to Title X grants. These require, among 21 | other things, HHS to provide a grantee notice prior to terminating funding based 22 | on noncompliance with applicable regulations, 45 C.F.R. § 75.373, and “an

1 from the start, that the Rule is facially invalid based on its asserted conflict with 2 certain statutory and constitutional requirements, and seeks an order setting the 3 Rule aside in its entirety. The case law on which Defendants have previously 4 relied—which simply recognizes that waiver doctrine does not prevent a party 5 from raising an argument that it failed to make during agency rulemaking when 6 the “rule is brought before [a] court for review of further agency action applying 7 it,” i.e., action beyond mere promulgation of the rule itself, Koretoff, 707 F.3d at 8 399 (emphasis added) (quoting Murphy Exploration & Prod. Co. v. U.S. Dep’t of 9 Interior, 270 F.3d 957, 958 (D.C. Cir. 2001))—is thus inapplicable to this lawsuit.
10 Contra Wash. MSJ at 57. Whether or not the Rule is currently in effect, it remains 11 the case that “the price for a ticket to facial review is to raise objections in the 12 rulemaking.” Koretoff, 707 F.3d at 401 (Williams, J., concurring).

13 2. Waiver aside, Plaintiffs’ § 1554 argument is meritless. The Rule 14 merely limits what the government chooses to fund and thus does not, for 15 example, “create[] any unreasonable barrier” to obtaining health care. 42 U.S.C.
16 § 18114(1). As the Supreme Court explained in Rust, there is a fundamental 17 distinction between impeding something and choosing not to subsidize it, 500
18 U.S. at 201-02; see Defs.’ MSJ at 30, and that reasoning disposes of the issue, 19 whether it is packaged as a constitutional or statutory claim.

20 _____
21 opportunity to object and provide information and documentation challenging the 22 suspension or termination action,” id. § 75.374.

1 In addition, while Plaintiffs dismiss the fact that § 1554 applies
2 “[n]otwithstanding any other provision of this Act,” 42 U.S.C. § 18114—thereby 3 signaling that this provision may implicitly displace otherwise applicable
4 provisions only in the ACA (see Wash. MSJ at 59-60)—they never explain why 5 Congress used that language when it repeatedly used the common phrase
6 “notwithstanding any other provision of law” elsewhere in the ACA. See Defs.’
7 MSJ at 31-32. And none of Plaintiffs’ various arguments make § 1554 any less 8 of a mousehole or their theory any less of an elephant: “Congress . . . does not 9 alter the fundamental details of a regulatory scheme in vague terms or ancillary 10 provisions,” Whitman v. Am. Trucking Ass’ns, 531 U.S. 457, 468 (2001), and 11 § 1554 qualifies as both. Nor do those arguments demonstrate a congressional 12 intent, “manifest” or otherwise, to eliminate HHS’s authority, recognized by the 13 Supreme Court in Rust, to promulgate regulations materially indistinguishable 14 from the current Rule. See Nat’l Ass’n of Home Builders, 551 U.S. at 662.
15 Plaintiffs’ § 1554 claim fails.⁵

16 C. Title X

17
18 ⁵ As Defendants have explained, see Defs.’ MSJ at 30-31, Plaintiffs 19 interpretation of § 1554 would mean that HHS could not, for example, even adopt 20 a regulation declining to provide Medicare coverage for any specific procedure, 21 and would therefore halt HHS from making even minor changes to programs that 22 it administers any time a provider or patient would be arguably adversely affected.

1 The Rule likewise does not violate “Title X’s central purpose,” Wash. MSJ
2 at 65, which is the same as it was the day the Supreme Court decided Rust. Cf.
3 Rust, 500 U.S. at 188-89 (rejecting similar argument that the physical-separation 4 requirement was inconsistent with Congress’s “intent” to create “a 5 comprehensive, integrated system of family planning services”). Nor does the 6 Rule violate the provision of Title X—which Plaintiffs do not dispute was in place 7 at the time Rust held that the “broad language of Title X plainly allows” the 8 materially indistinguishable 1988 regulations—that “[t]he acceptance by an 9 individual of family planning services or family planning or population growth 10 information” provided through the Title X program “shall be voluntary and shall 11 not be a prerequisite to eligibility for or receipt of any other service or assistance 12 from, or to participation in, any other program of the entity or individual that 13 provided such service or information.” 42 U.S.C. § 300a-5. To the contrary, the 14 Rule preserves a regulatory provision implementing this statutory directive. See 15 42 C.F.R. § 59.5(a)(2). Again, similar statutory arguments were advanced in Rust
16 and the Supreme Court never accepted them. See, e.g., Reply Brief for State 17 Petitioners at 6-7, Rust, (Nos. 89-1391, 1392), 1990 WL 505761; see also Rust, 18 500 U.S. at 202 (rejecting constitutional argument that the 1988 regulations 19 “interfere with a woman’s right to make an informed and voluntary choice”).

20 Plaintiffs also contend that 42 C.F.R. § 59.18 violates Title X by “limit[ing] 21 the use of Title X funds for core functions,” Wash. MSJ at 68, but fails to mention 22 that this provision only forbids expenditures “for purposes prohibited with these

1 | funds, such as support for the abortion business of a Title X grantee or
2 | subrecipient.” 42 C.F.R. § 59.18(a) (emphasis added); see also id. § 59.18(b)
3 | (prohibiting use of funds for “activity . . . that in any way tends to promote public
4 | support or opposition to any legislative proposal or candidate for office”). Those
5 | restrictions are entirely consistent with § 1008.

6 | Finally, Plaintiffs challenge the provision of the Rule that requires Title X
7 | projects to “offer either comprehensive primary health services onsite or have a
8 | robust referral linkage with primary health providers who are in close physical
9 | proximity to the Title X site in order to promote holistic health and provide 10 | seamless care.” 42 C.F.R. § 59.5(a)(12). Plaintiffs contend that such
11 | “comprehensive primary health services” fall “outside the scope of Title X,” 12 | Wash. MSJ a 68-69. But as HHS explained in the Rule, this provision strikes an
13 | appropriate balance between focusing Title X funds on their core purpose—
14 | “preventive care and preconception family planning”—while also ensuring,
15 | through the promotion of “robust referral networks,” that clients “have ready
16 | access to non-Title X health care services that they need, including treatment for
17 | health conditions that are not provided by Title X and for postconception care
18 | (other than abortion as a method of family planning).” 84 Fed. Reg. at 7733. It
19 | is curious for Plaintiffs to raise this argument—essentially, that HHS cannot tell
20 | Title X projects to refer for medical services outside the Title X program—when 21 | their argument regarding the nondirective provision hinges on the contention that
22 | HHS must require Title X projects to refer patients for abortion services

1 necessarily performed outside the Title X program. See, e.g., Wash. MSJ at 8 2 (criticizing Rule for “striking previous requirement[] that patients be . . . referred 3 for out-of-program care upon request”). In any event, Plaintiffs do not actually 4 identify any specific provision of Title X with which this provision of the Rule is 5 inconsistent, nor explain how the fact that the Rule requires Title X projects to 6 have a system for providing referrals for necessary medical care outside the 7 auspices of the program to patients who need it somehow undermines Title X.

8 Because Rust has already established that the Rule is consistent with Title
9 X, and because the Rule does not, in any event, condition eligibility for other HHS 10 programs on an individual’s acceptance of Title X services, as § 300a-5 forbids, 11 or otherwise run afoul of the statute, the Court should dismiss Plaintiffs’ Title X 12 claim.

13 II. THE RULE IS NOT ARBITRARY AND CAPRICIOUS

14 Plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate that the Rule is arbitrary and 15 capricious. Plaintiffs’ arguments are mere policy disagreements in the guise of 16 APA claims, and their most recent briefs cover no new ground. Agency action 17 must be upheld in the face of an arbitrary and capricious claim so long as the 18 agency “examine[s] the relevant data and articulate[s] a satisfactory explanation 19 for its action including a rational connection between the facts found and the 20 choice made.” Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass’n v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 463 21 U.S. 29, 43 (1983) (citation omitted). HHS did precisely that. While Plaintiffs 22

1 clearly disagree with the policy judgments contained in the Rule, they cannot 2 show that HHS acted unlawfully.

3 A. The Referral and Counseling Restrictions Are Reasonable.

4 HHS reasonably adopted the prohibitions on promoting and referring for 5 abortion because they implement the best reading of § 1008—namely, that a 6 program that refers patients for, or promotes, abortion as a method of family 7 planning is by definition a program “where abortion is a method of family 8 planning.” See 84 Fed. Reg. at 7759. The Supreme Court held in Rust that such 9 “justifications are sufficient to support the Secretary’s revised approach,” 500
10 U.S. at 187, which is “plainly allow[ed]” by Title X, id. at 184. That conclusion 11 remains true today, and HHS adequately explained its reasons for adopting the 12 Rule. Plaintiffs’ contrary arguments lack persuasive force.

13 First, NFPRHA asserts that HHS failed to explain what NFPRHA alleges 14 is a departure from the 2000 regulations with respect to Defendants’ interpretation 15 of the nondirective provision. NFPRHA MSJ at 11-13, 15-18. But contrary to 16 NFPRHA’s claim, and as Defendants have explained, HHS never concluded in 17 the 2000 regulations that the nondirective provision required suspension of the 18 1988 regulations. For HHS, the “crucial difference between” the 1988 regulations 19 and the 2000 regulations was simply “one of experience.” 65 Fed. Reg. 41,270, 20 41,271 (July 3, 2000) (2000 regulations). Thus, there was no reversal of position 21 as to HHS’s interpretation of the nondirective provision—which HHS continues 22 to recognize requires that all pregnancy counseling that is offered be nondirective,

1 | see, e.g., 84 Fed. Reg. at 7733—and therefore no need for any additional
2 | explanation than what exists in the Rule’s preamble. More generally, and contrary
3 | to NFPRHA’s claim, HHS clearly acknowledged that the 2000 regulations
4 | required Title X projects to provide abortion referrals and nondirective counseling
5 | on abortion, and HHS explained at length the reasons for the changes in the Rule.
6 | See 84 Fed. Reg. at 7716, 7758-59. Under the APA, agencies must acknowledge
7 | a change in position and provide a reasoned explanation for that change. See
8 | Encino Motorcars, LLC v. Navarro, 136 S. Ct. 2117, 2125-26 (2016). They need
9 | not—as NFPRHA would have it—address every statement or rationale
10 | underpinning the prior policy. HHS acknowledged differences between the 2000
11 | regulations and the Rule and explained the reasons for the change. Nothing more
12 | is required by the APA. See id. at 2126 (2016).

13 | NFPRHA similarly errs in claiming that HHS “failed to address its
14 | abandonment” of Quality Family Planning guidelines, referring to a 2014
15 | publication containing clinical recommendations for providing quality family
16 | planning services. NFPRHA MSJ at 15; see id. at 13-15, 16. HHS continues to
17 | expect Title X providers to follow QFP guidelines to the extent they are consistent
18 | with the Rule. To the extent that those guidelines might conflict with the Rule,
19 | HHS acknowledged that it was departing from its prior approach under the 2000
20 | regulations, and the QFP guidelines in place at the time of the Rule did not (and 21 | indeed could not) substantively go beyond the 2000 regulations. See, e.g., 84 Fed.
22 | Reg. at 7715. Moreover, while NFPRHA claims that HHS did not “provide a

1 | reasoned explanation for abandoning” the QFP guidelines, NFPRHA MSJ at 16
2 | n.3, HHS reasonably explained that it was adopting the Rule based on the best
3 | reading of § 1008.

4 | Additionally, NFPRHA does not advance its claims by rehashing these very 5 | same arguments under the rubric of allegedly imposing additional costs on
6 | patients. Id. at 18-19. Its real objection is to HHS’s policy decision, rather than 7 | to whether HHS adequately weighted any such alleged costs. But that decision is,
8 | of course, not NFPRHA’s to make. As to the actual weighing of costs and 9 | benefits, the principle that “a court is not to substitute its judgment for that of the 10 | agency” is “especially true when the agency is called upon to weigh the costs and
11 | benefits of alternative polic[i]es.” Consumer Elecs. Ass’n v. FCC, 347 F.3d 291,
12 | 303 (D.C. Cir. 2003) (citation omitted). And here, of course, HHS did consider
13 | potential costs and benefits to patients, but merely reach and different conclusion
14 | than the one Plaintiffs would have preferred. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 7745-46.

15 | Second, HHS expressly considered and responded to comments arguing
16 | that the Rule would force providers to violate medical ethics. See 84 Fed. Reg. at
17 | 7724, 7748. As explained previously, see Def. MSJ at 34-36, HHS concluded
18 | that those concerns were misplaced, relying on federal and state conscience laws
19 | permitting providers to take the same actions required by the Rule, and on Rust’s
20 | upholding a nearly identical, but stricter, version of the referral and counseling
21 | restrictions over similar objections. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 7742, 7748.

22

1 While NFPRHA disagrees with HHS’s conclusion, NFPRHA MSJ at 20-2 24, it fails to show that that conclusion was unreasonable. NFPRHA attempts to 3 downplay the importance of the conscience statutes, id. at 22 n.6, but those laws
4 demonstrate that Congress and state legislatures do not believe that medical ethics
5 require that all medical providers must refer for abortion. Similarly, NFPRHA
6 contends that Rust is “inapposite,” id. at 22, but the Court upheld the restrictions 7 against a First Amendment challenge in the face of a dissent arguing that they 8 compelled doctors to violate medical ethics. Def. MSJ at 35-36. The Court 9 explained that a doctor was “always free to make clear that advice regarding 10 abortion is simply beyond the scope of the program,” Rust, 500 U.S. at 200, and 11 the same is true under the present Rule, see 42 C.F.R. § 59.14(e)(5).

12 More fundamentally, NFPRHA’s grievance is with the limited nature of the 13 Title X program itself. Title X creates a limited program, focused on 14 preconception services, and in that context, the doctor-patient relationship is not 15 “sufficiently all encompassing so as to justify an expectation on the part of the 16 patient of comprehensive medical advice.” 500 U.S. at 200. And because Title X 17 “does not provide post conception medical care, . . . a doctor’s silence with regard 18 to abortion cannot reasonably be thought to mislead a client into thinking that the 19 doctor does not consider abortion an appropriate option for her.” Id. Congress’s 20 limitations on the program no more violate a physician’s ethical responsibilities 21 than her First Amendment rights.
22

1 Third, because HHS reasonably concluded that the referral and counseling
2 restrictions do not force Title X grantees to violate medical ethics, NFPRHA
3 cannot override that reasoned determination by threatening that “the Rule causes 4 provider departures through its distortion of the provider-patient relationship and 5 conflicts with professional norms.” NFPRHA MSJ at 24; see also id. at 24-27.
6 NFPRHA’s assertion that the Rule forces providers to leave Title X depends on 7 its incorrect premise that the Rule requires violations of medical ethics, and 8 NFPRHA cites no authority for the extraordinary proposition that an agency 9 administering a competitive grant program must either accede to the wishes of a 10 subset of current grantees or identify in advance those entities who will take their 11 place. Indeed, similar threats did not alter the outcome in Rust, and NFPRHA
12 offers no reason why this case should be different. See Planned Parenthood 13 Amicus Brief at 14 n.45, Rust (Nos. 89-1391, -1392), 1990 WL 10012649 (“Since 14 many providers will not accept Title X funds under the unethical restrictions 15 imposed by the regulations, they will be forced to close or drastically curtail 16 services, depriving poor women of their sole source of family planning 17 services.”).

18 Regardless, HHS reasonably predicted that any withdrawing incumbent 19 providers likely will be replaced by new providers who were previously 20 discouraged from joining the program by the abortion-referral requirement in the 21 2000 rule, or who will otherwise be willing to compete for and accept federal 22 funds under the Rule. HHS explained that “under the 2000 regulations, some

1 individuals and entities may have chosen not to apply to provide Title X services 2 because they anticipated they would be pressured to counsel or refer for 3 abortions,” 84 Fed. Reg. at 7780, and it pointed to data showing that a substantial 4 number of medical professionals would limit the scope of their practice if forced 5 to provide services that violated their conscience, id. at 7781 n.139. In addition, 6 HHS had received input from “supportive commenters not[ing] that the 2000 7 regulations stand in the way of some organizations applying for Title X funds, or 8 participating in Title X projects, due to the requirement for abortion referrals and 9 information.” Id. at 7744. HHS thus predicted that the Rule may “lead to an 10 increase in the number of health care providers who apply and receive funding 11 under the Title X program, thus decreasing current gaps in family planning 12 services in certain areas of the country.” Id. at 7780.

13 As Defendants have explained, those predictions have been borne out, with 14 new providers emerging as a result of the Rule’s referral provisions, as evidenced 15 by recent challenges to the abortion-referral requirement in the 2000 regulations 16 brought by current and prospective Title X grantees on the basis of statutory and 17 constitutional protections for religious beliefs. See Def. MSJ at 38-39. These 18 subsequent events belie NFPRHA’s contention that HHS’s prediction was 19 unreasonable. See NFPRHA MSJ at 30-33. Although NFPRHA suggests these 20 providers are inadequate substitutes, id. at 33-35, HHS was permitted to consider 21 the emergence of new providers regardless of Plaintiffs’ subjective evaluations of 22 such providers, and the existence of such lawsuits alone confirms the

1 | reasonableness of HHS’s prediction. Indeed, HHS expects the Rule’s new
2 | application criteria favoring innovative approaches for underserved populations
3 | to “encourag[e] broader and more diverse applicants,” 84 Fed. Reg. at 7718, a
4 | feature HHS found weighs in the Rule’s favor. And more generally, HHS
5 | explained, it could not precisely “anticipate future turnover in grantees”—which 6 | hinges on the decisions of various independent actors—meaning any such 7 | “calculations would be purely speculative, and, thus, very difficult to forecast or
8 | quantify.” Id. at 7782. In all events, HHS concluded that “compliance with 9 | statutory program integrity provisions is of greater importance” than the “cost” of 10 | departing from the status quo, id. at 7783, and the APA does not permit courts to
11 | second-guess that policy judgment.⁶

12 | Fourth, NFPRHA questions HHS’s decision to restrict nondirective
13 | pregnancy counseling to physicians and advance practice providers (APPs).

14 | _____
15 | ⁶ NFPRHA errs in contending that the APA somehow bars the Court from 16 | examining whether subsequent events have borne out HHS’s reasonable
17 | prediction that the Rule may lead to an increase in the number of Title X providers.
18 | NFPRHA MSJ at 35. Neither Michigan v. EPA, 135 S. Ct. 2699 (2015), nor SEC
19 | v. Chenery Corp., 318 U.S. 80 (1943), suggests that a reviewing court may not
20 | make such an examination, but only that a reviewing court may not uphold agency
21 | action based on a substantive argument that the agency did not invoke when it
22 | took the action under review. See Michigan, 135 S. Ct. at 2710.

1 NFPRHA MSJ at 27-29. But HHS sensibly required that those who use federal 2 funds to provide counseling concerning a medical condition (pregnancy) “receive 3 at least a graduate level degree in the relevant medical field and maintain a federal 4 or State-level certification and licensure to diagnose, treat, and counsel patients.”
5 84 Fed. Reg. at 7728 (emphasis added).

6 Finally, NFPRHA invites the Court to second-guess HHS’s judgment in 7 weighing the potential benefits of the Rule. NFPRHA MSJ at 29-30. But as 8 explained above, the principle that “a court is not to substitute its judgment for 9 that of the agency” is “especially true when the agency is called upon to weigh the 10 costs and benefits of alternative polic[i]es.” Consumer Elecs. Ass’n, 347 F.3d at 11 303 (citation omitted). In any event, NFPRHA incorrectly characterizes HHS’s 12 description of the Rule’s potential benefits. For example, HHS explained that the 13 Rule “seeks to remedy the potential for confusion, under the 2000 regulations, 14 about whether Title X funds can be, or are being used, in a project where abortion 15 is a method of family planning,” inter alia, by “improving grant monitoring. . . to 16 prevent the misuse of taxpayer funds.” 84 Fed. Reg. at 7725. It is reasonable to 17 anticipate that relieving such confusion will “reduce the regulatory burden 18 associated with monitoring and regulating Title X providers for compliance.” Id.
19 at 7719.

20 B. The Separation Requirement Is Reasonable.

21 Plaintiffs fare no better in arguing that the Rule’s physical-separation 22 requirement is arbitrary and capricious.

1 1. Plaintiffs contend, first, that HHS failed to rationally explain alleged 2 conflicts between the separation requirements and the factual findings on which 3 HHS based the 2000 Rule. See NFPRHA MSJ at 36-41. Not so. The 2000
4 regulations already mandated financial separation, 84 Fed. Reg. at 7715; 65 Fed.
5 Reg. at 41,276, and HHS reasonably determined that physical separation also is 6 warranted to address the risk that taxpayer funds will be used to fund abortion—7 the same rationale approved in Rust.

8 Plaintiffs disagree with that conclusion, and they point to statements in the 9 preamble to the 2000 regulations that they allege support their position. NFPRHA
10 MSJ at. 36-37. Yet, the Supreme Court held in Rust that HHS’s predictive 11 judgement about how best to comply with § 1008 was a reasonable basis for the 12 same requirement Plaintiffs challenge here. 500 U.S. at 187. As in Rust, HHS 13 justified its policy by explaining that the prior regulations “failed to implement 14 properly the statute.” Id. And HHS considered and discussed reliance interests, 15 comments received, and the previous approaches, ultimately “reaffirm[ing the] 16 reasoned determination” it made in 1988. 84 Fed. Reg. at 7724. The observation 17 that Title X projects previously used funds “for the critical building blocks . . .
18 such as utilities, staff training, office systems, bulk purchasing, and outreach 19 activities,” NFPRHA MSJ at 47 (citing 84 Fed. Reg. at 7773-74), underscores 20 HHS’s conclusion that collocation of Title X clinics and abortion clinics has the 21 effect of subsidizing abortion in violation of § 1008. See id. at 7766. There is 22

1 | therefore no merit to the claim that HHS’s 2000 factual findings somehow
2 | undermine the current Rule, or that the Rule is otherwise arbitrary and capricious.

3 | Contrary to Plaintiffs’ claims, see NFPRHA MSJ at 37-41; Wash. MSJ at
4 | 16-20, 28-33, Defendants also took into account the relevant reliance interests
5 | when promulgating the challenged Rule, as Defendants have already explained at 6 | length. See Defs.’ MSJ at 37; Defs.’ PI Opp’n at 42-44. Although Plaintiffs
7 | provide a lengthy description of how grantees have operated in the past, and point
8 | to various comments expressing a different view than the one the agency adopted,
9 | HHS’s consideration included all of the points that Plaintiffs now raise in their
10 | briefs, and HHS reasonably explained why it was departing from past practice.
11 | Similarly, although Washington disputes it, see Wash. MSJ at 20-28, HHS also
12 | considered the effects on public health and patients, and explained that public
13 | health would benefit from the Rule, which would “contribute to more clients being 14 | served, gaps in service being closed, and improved client care.” 84 Fed. Reg. at 15 | 7723. HHS therefore acted lawfully, as affirmed in Rust.

16 | Somewhat remarkably, NFPRHA also objects to HHS’s encouragement of 17 | grantees to contact the relevant program office with any questions regarding how
18 | to comply with the separation requirement. See NFPRHA MSJ at 42; see also 84
19 | Fed. Reg. at 7766 (“The Department encourages grantees to contact the program
20 | office with questions, discuss ways to comply with the physical separation
21 | requirement, and to put a workable plan in place to meet the compliance
22 | deadline.”). Yet, it cannot, of course, be arbitrary and capricious for the

1 government merely to offer to make itself available to provide additional 2 information in the event compliance questions arise. Plaintiffs also fault HHS for 3 failing to provide further explanation, or so-called “objective guideposts,” on what 4 it means to provide “direct implementation” of a Title X project or “direct 5 services” to clients. See NFPRHA MSJ at 42-43 (citing § 59.18). There is no 6 ambiguity in those terms, despite Plaintiffs’ claim to the contrary. And even if 7 there were, Plaintiffs could seek guidance from HHS on any implementation 8 questions by simply asking, as discussed above. See Nat’l Family Planning & 9 Reprod. Health Ass’n v. Gonzales, 468 F.3d 826, 831 (D.C. Cir 2006) (“Here the 10 association has within its grasp an easy means for alleviating the alleged 11 uncertainty. It could inquire of HHS exactly how the agency proposes to resolve 12 any of the conflicts that it claims to spot between the amendment and the 13 regulations.”).

14 The same can be said of NFPRHA’s claim that HHS is the “lone arbiter” of 15 compliance. NFPRHA MSJ at 42. As the agency providing federal grant funds, 16 HHS is, of course, tasked with evaluating compliance, and that is unobjectionable.
17 And its compliance decisions are reviewable if Plaintiffs were to challenge them.
18 See Defs.’ MSJ at 44-45 n.5. But Plaintiffs are incorrect that the Rule and the 19 accompanying preamble do not provide sufficient information to understand what 20 grantees must do to satisfy the physical separation requirement. That requirement 21 is described at great length in the preamble. See, e.g. 84 Fed. Reg. at 7774-75.
22 And, again, grantees may contact HHS if there are any potential ambiguities to 1 seek clarification. Plaintiffs also claim that the 1988 regulations rejected the 2 requirement that separation extend to “office entrances and exits” as too onerous.

3 See NFPRHA MSJ at 41-42 (citing 53 Fed. Reg. at 3938-41). But that is incorrect.
4 In 1988, did not make a determination that separate entrances and exits would be 5 too onerous. Rather, HHS opted to judge whether the physical separation 6 requirement was satisfied “based on a review of facts and circumstances,” see 53
7 Fed. Reg. at 2945 (§ 59.9); see also id. at 2940-41. Thus, despite NFPRHA’s
8 argument that the current Rule lacks sufficient objective standards, the 1988 9 regulations upheld in Rust provided less guidance than those that Plaintiffs 10 challenge here. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 7789 (§ 59.15) (providing factors relevant to 11 the determination of whether the physical separation requirement is satisfied).

12 2. Plaintiffs also argue that HHS underestimated compliance costs that 13 the proposed rule may impose, and underestimated—in Plaintiffs’ view—the 14 potential withdrawals of Title X grantees from the program and resulting 15 disruption. See NFPRHA MSJ at 43-48; Wash. MSJ at 20-28. As Defendants 16 have explained previously, however, HHS, which administers the Title X 17 program, is best situated to consider the potential effects on that program and it 18 expressly did so. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 7781-82. Although commenters “provided 19 extremely high cost estimates based on assumptions that they would have to build 20 new facilities” to comply with the physical-separation requirement, HHS 21 reasonably anticipated “that entities will usually choose the lowest cost method to 22 come into compliance,” such as “shift[ing] their abortion services” to one of their

1 multiple “distinct facilities.” Id. at 7781. And in any event, HHS “acknowledg[ed] 2 that there is substantial uncertainty regarding the magnitude of the[] effects” of 3 the physical-separation requirement, and provided an “estimate” of “an average” 4 that was “an increase from [the] averaged estimate . . . in the proposed rule.” Id.
5 at 7781-82. Thus, in considering the compliance costs on providers and the 6 possibility that some incumbent providers might withdraw from the program, 7 HHS simply made a different judgment than plaintiffs, which it of course was 8 permitted to do. See Motor Vehicle Mfrs. Ass’n, 463 U.S. at 43.

9 Plaintiffs rely extensively on comments in the record supporting their 10 position. Yet, nothing in the APA requires an agency to defer to the views of any 11 particular commenter over the agency’s own. Rather, the agency must consider 12 significant comments and provide a reasoned response. See Perez v. Mortgage
13 Bankers Ass’n, 135 S. Ct. 1199, 1203 (2015). Having considered the Rule’s 14 effects, HHS concluded that the Rule was warranted to comply with Title X 15 notwithstanding those predicted costs and effects. That decision was not irrational 16 simply because plaintiffs disagree with HHS’s predictive judgments or ultimate 17 conclusion that the benefits outweighed the costs. See Defs.’ PI Opp’n at 48-49; 18 Defs.’ MSJ at 37-39. Plaintiffs also apparently disagree with HHS’s weighing of 19 the effects of the separation requirement on patients, see NFPRHA MSJ at 48-53, 20 but HHS clearly considered that issue and explained why patients would not be 21 harmed, see, e.g., 84 Fed. Reg. at 7782. HHS therefore met its obligation to 22 provide a reasoned basis for its decision.

1 C. The Rule Does Not Arbitrarily Interfere with Title X or 2 Otherwise Interfere with Title X's Purpose.

3 NFPRHA asserts that various ancillary provisions of the Rule are, in 4 NFPRHA's view, "based on irrational purported reasoning." NFPRHA MSJ at 5 54. These arguments amount to nothing more than an impermissible attempt to 6 substitute Plaintiffs' views for those of the agency, and the Court should reject 7 them. See, e.g., Nat'l Wildlife Fed'n v. U.S. Army Corps of Eng'rs, 384 F.3d 1163, 8 1180 (9th Cir. 2004) ("Our judicial role is not to second-guess the decisions of the 9 agency, but to determine whether, on the administrative record, the agency's 10 actions were arbitrary and capricious, an abuse of discretion, or contrary to 11 law.").⁷

12 1. To begin, NFPRHA again challenges 42 C.F.R. § 59.5(a)(12), this 13 time on the ground that it "would block existing or future Title X sites in areas 14 where low-income patients lack access to primary care." NFPRHA MSJ at 55.
15 As explained above, however, the requirement that Title X providers "[s]hould 16 offer either comprehensive primary health services onsite or have a robust referral 17 linkage with primary health care providers who are in close physical proximity" 18 reasonably encourages access to primary health care services and supports other 19 health care goals without limiting access to care. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 7725. And

20

21 ⁷ NFPRHA also quibbles with minor aspects of the Rule's definitional 22 section, 42 C.F.R. § 59.2. see NFPRHA MSJ at 66-68, but provides no basis on which to set aside the Secretary's judgment under the APA's lenient standard.

1 to the extent NFPRHA’s concern is confusion, Title X applicants can always seek 2 clarity from HHS. See id. at 7766 (“The Department welcomes regular interaction 3 with grantees and subrecipients, should they have questions. Project officers are 4 available to help grantees successfully implement the Title X program in 5 compliance with both the statute and the regulation.”).⁸

6 NFPRHA’s concerns are further unfounded because § 59.5(a)(12) does not 7 impose an absolute requirement that a project offer either comprehensive primary 8 health services onsite or have linkages to primary health providers in close 9 proximity. See 42 C.F.R. § 59.5(a)(12). It instead reflects Congress’s expectation 10 that “Family Planning Services under Title X generally are most effectively 11 provided in a general health setting.” 84 Fed. Reg. at 7749 (quoting S. Rep. No.
12 63, 94 Cong., 1st Sess. 65-66 (1975)). HHS also accounts for the geographic 13 distribution of services when making grant decisions. See Announcement of 14
15
16

17 _____
18 ⁸ Plaintiffs also puzzlingly suggest that this requirement is “inconsistent 19 with” the physical separation requirement. NFPRHA MSJ at 56-57. To the extent 20 the comprehensive primary health services are located onsite at a Title X project, 21 any services must, of course, be kept separate from the abortion-related activities 22 that the Rule prohibits.

1 Availability of Funds for Title X Family Planning Services Grants, Notice at 49-2 50.⁹

3 2. Next, NFPRHA contends that the Rule will degrade care because it
4 removes the requirement that a Title X project provide “medically approved” 5 family planning methods and allows entities to offer only a single method or a 6 limited number of family planning methods. NFPRHA MSJ at 57-59. But HHS 7 addressed these concerns by explaining that, even if individual service sites might 8 offer a limited number of family planning methods, each Title X project, as a 9 whole, must “provide[] a broad range of family planning methods and services, 10 including contraception and natural family planning.” 84 Fed. Reg. at 7732; see 11 also 42 C.F.R. § 59.5(a)(1) (“A participating entity may offer only a single method 12 or a limited number of methods of family planning as long as the entire project 13 offers a broad range of such family planning methods and services.”).

14 And with regard to the removal of the “medically approved” requirement 15 in particular, NFPRHA’s complaint is with Congress, not HHS: “When Congress 16 specified what family planning methods and services Title X projects must 17 provide, Congress directed that the methods and services be ‘acceptable and 18 effective’; it did not specify that they be ‘medically approved.’” 84 Fed. Reg. at 19 7732 (quoting 42 U.S.C. § 300(a)). HHS addressed this issue directly, see id. at

20
21 ⁹ https://www.hhs.gov/opa/sites/default/files/FY2019-FOA-FP-services-
22 amended.pdf.

1 7732, 7740-41, and explained that the “medically approved” language had not 2 proved useful in practice, see id. at 7732 (explaining the practical difficulty of 3 enforcing the “medically approved” requirement). This response was an adequate 4 justification for returning to the text of the statute, which requires that any family 5 planning services be “acceptable and effective,” and which HHS rationally
6 concluded would “sufficiently ensure[]” that Title X clients receive appropriate 7 services. *Id.*¹⁰

8 3. NFPRHA also objects to certain changes that the Rule made to the 9 Title X “grant-making criteria.” See NFPRHA at 60-65. In particular, it 10 challenges the Rule’s requirement that Title X grant applicants demonstrate their 11 “affirmative compliance” with the other, substantive requirements of the Rule.
12 See 42 C.F.R. § 59.7(b). As HHS explained, however, it implemented this 13 additional requirement “to better direct Title X funds for family planning projects, 14 to prevent misuse of funds, and to save taxpayer dollars by only sending qualified 15

16 ¹⁰ NFPRHA also is in no position to object that other providers might offer 17 family planning methods and services that NFPRHA would not itself offer. See, 18 e.g., NFPRHA MSJ at 58. The Rule leaves NFPRHA free to decide which 19 methods and services to offer so long as its project grantees meet the statutory and 20 regulatory requirements—primarily, that each project offer a broad range of 21 methods (including natural family planning and, as the Rule specifies, 22 contraception).

1 applications to the costly and time consuming competitive review committee.” 84
2 Fed. Reg. at 7754.

3 The Court should reject NFPRHA’s attempt to Monday-morning
4 quarterback HHS’s reasoned judgment regarding the criteria with which to judge 5 applicants for federal funds. Section 1006 of the Title X statute specifically 6 provides that the Secretary may issue regulations setting forth criteria by which 7 HHS will award Title X grants and contracts. 42 U.S.C. § 300a-4(a). HHS’s 8 criteria tracks the statute itself, listing and elaborating on the non-exclusive 9 criteria that Congress provided. 42 C.F.R § 59.7(c)(1)-(4). Both the statute and 10 Rule specify that projects shall provide a broad range of family planning methods 11 and services, and that the relative needs of applicants, the capacity to make rapid 12 and effective use of funds, the number of patients to be served, and local need 13 shall be considered when selecting grants. The Rule also provides that proposals 14 must specify how an applicant may meet these and other requirements of the 15 regulations. Title X’s grant application process—both before the Rule and under 16 it—is a sophisticated one, with funding announcements and grant applications 17 running many pages long, and subject to a detailed review and scoring system.
18 None of that complexity is new in this Rule, and the preamble to the Rule as well 19 as longstanding agency practice makes it clear that HHS provides applicants with 20 ample guidance during the process.

21 Additionally, NFPRHA takes issue with new review criteria regarding a 22 grantee’s “ability to procure a broad range of diverse subrecipients.” NFPRHA

1 MSJ at 63 (quoting 84 Fed. Reg. at 7754). But it is eminently reasonable for HHS
2 to ask grantees to show how they can expand the impact of federal funds, 3 consistent with Title X’s mandate to provide “a broad range of acceptable and 4 effective family planning methods and services,” 42 U.S.C. § 300(a), and to take 5 into account an applicant’s capacity to make rapid and effective use of grants and 6 contracts, id. § 300(b). NFPRHA’s claim to the contrary is meritless.

7 4. For the reasons discussed above, as well as in Defendants’ prior 8 briefing, there is also no merit to NFPRHA’s claims that the Rule results from 9 “arbitrary balancing” and “undermines Title X’s fundamental purpose.”
10 NFPRHA MSJ at 68-72. Unable to show that other portions of the Rule are 11 arbitrary and capricious, NFPRHA finally quibbles with the Rule’s requirements 12 for additional information in grant applications and periodic reporting. See 13 NFPRHA MSJ at 69-70 (citing § 59.5(a)(13)). However, HHS specifically 14 addressed the concern of additional “administrative burden” that NFPRHA cites, 15 and explained that it was reasonable to promote additional transparency regarding 16 the use of federal funds. See 84 Fed. Reg. at 7750. Similarly, HHS also addressed 17 NFPRHA’s objections to the additional protections in § 59.17 to rule out 18 victimization of minors. See NFPRHA MSJ at 71; see also 84 Fed. Reg. 7717, 19 7771. HHS acknowledged that complying with State and local laws may be 20 complicated and reasonably required grantees to have measures in place to ensure 21
22

1 compliance and to strengthen protections for minors. See Fed. Reg. at 7771.¹¹
2 These common sense compliance requirements in the Rule cannot render it 3 arbitrary and capricious.

4 III. PLAINTIFFS' LOGICAL OUTGROWTH CLAIM IS MERITLESS

5 Although Plaintiffs claim that certain of the Rule's provisions do not 6 constitute the logical outgrowths of HHS's proposals in the NPRM, Wash. MSJ at 7 34-39, a "final regulation that varies from the proposal, even substantially, will be 8 valid as long as it is 'in character with the original proposal and a logical 9 outgrowth of the notice and comments.'" Hodge v. Dalton, 107 F.3d 705, 712 (9th 10 Cir. 1997) (citation omitted). To determine whether notice was adequate, courts 11 ask whether a complaining party should have anticipated that a particular 12 requirement might be imposed, and whether a new round of notice and comment 13 would provide the first opportunity for interested parties to offer comments that 14 could persuade the agency to modify its rule. Env'tl Def. Ctr. v. EPA, 344 F.3d 15 832, 851 (9th Cir. 2003). Plaintiffs received sufficient notice under this standard.

16 First, it is irrelevant that the proposed rule did not specifically seek 17 comment on whether referrals for prenatal care were medically necessary for all 18

19 ¹¹ NFPRHA also refers to § 59.18(c) as "counterproductive," but does not 20 explain its reasoning for that conclusion. That portion of the Rule merely requires 21 grantees to account for their charges against Title X grants, and is unobjectionable.
22 See 84 Fed. Reg. at 7791 (§ 59.18(c)).

1 pregnant patients, Wash. MSJ at 35-36, because the final rule does not depend on 2 HHS’s “pronouncement” that such referrals are medically necessary as the basis
3 for any substantive component. The final rule (and the NPRM) require prenatal 4 referral after pregnancy is established because such a referral aligns with HHS’s 5 interpretation of Title X as a pre-conceptional program. The NPRM specifically 6 cites a 1970 House Report to support the proposition that HHS is “clarifying that 7 pregnant women must be referred for appropriate prenatal care services, rather 8 than receiving them within a Title X project, because those services are not part 9 of family planning services within the Title X program.” 83 Fed. Reg. at 25502, 10 25505 (citing H.R. Rep. No. 91-1472 (1970) (emphasis added)). The NPRM also 11 clearly states: “Title X projects do not themselves provide post-conception care.
12 Thus, proposed § 59.14 would require that pregnant women be referred outside of 13 the Title X project for prenatal care and other related medical and social services, 14 as well as for other services relating to pregnancy after pregnancy is confirmed.” 15 Id. at 25,518 (emphasis added). Accordingly, the final rule states that “once a 16 client served by a Title X project is medically verified as pregnant, she shall be 17 referred to a health care provider for medically necessary prenatal health care.”
18 84 Fed. Reg. at 7789. In other words, the use of the phrase “medically necessary” 19 in the final rule does not change the referral requirement from the NPRM to the 20 final rule: the underlying requirement does not depend on a finding of medical 21 necessity but on HHS’s interpretation of Rust. Under both the NPRM and the 22

1 final rule, pregnant clients are to be referred for prenatal health care because “Title 2 X is limited to preconceptional services.” Rust, 500 U.S. at 179.

3 Second, HHS could not have been clearer in the proposed rule that under 4 Section 59.14(b)(1)(ii), the list provided to patients would include only 5 “comprehensive health service providers.” See 83 Fed. Reg. at 25,531. Plaintiffs 6 appear to object that the language in the proposed rule did not specify that 7 “comprehensive health care service providers” must also provide primary care 8 services. Wash. MSJ at 37. But “comprehensive” means just that—9 “comprehensive” care, which necessarily includes primary care services. And 10 commenters raised precisely the same concern that Plaintiffs flag—that the 11 restrictions on what type of providers may be included in the list will “diminish[] 12 the ability to include any abortion providers on the list.” Id. As HHS described 13 in the preamble, “many commenters oppose the list of providers that may be 14 shared with pregnant patients who request abortion” because they “believe the list 15 . . . may be . . . difficult to implement for some providers because of the lack of 16 comprehensive service providers who also provide abortion in their community.” 17 84 Fed. Reg. at 7760. Thus, not only were commenters on notice of this aspect of 18 the Rule, they offered their views on the subject.

19 Third, Plaintiffs fail to show that HHS’s replacement of the phrase
20 “medically indicated” with the phrase “medically necessary” in Section 59.5(b)(1) 21 of the final rule makes any material difference. Wash. MSJ at 37-38. The final 22 rule makes clear that this change was made for stylistic purposes: “The proposed

1 rule would amend § 59.5(b)(1) to require that any referrals to other medical 2 facilities be made consistent with § 59.14(a), which would bar referral for abortion 3 as a method of family planning. The department finalizes 42 CFR 59.5(b)(1) with 4 stylistic changes and to change the phrase ‘when medically indicated’ to ‘when 5 medically necessary.’” 84 Fed. Reg. at 7752. Referrals for abortion as a method 6 of family planning are prohibited in both the NPRM and in the final rule because 7 referrals must be “consistent with § 59.14(a).” 83 Fed. Reg. at 25,530; 84 Fed.
8 Reg. at 7752. The bulk of Plaintiffs’ argument conflates the use of the phrase 9 “medically necessary” with a restriction on providers’ abilities to refer that simply 10 does not exist, except with respect to abortion. Wash. MSJ at 37-38. But Plaintiffs 11 fail to explain how the substitution of the phrase “medically necessary” in the final 12 rule for stylistic reasons makes any substantive difference. Notice and comment 13 was therefore not required for HHS to implement this change in word choice.

14 Finally, Plaintiffs incorrectly claim the NPRM provided no notice with 15 respect to the requirement that nondirective pregnancy counseling come from 16 physicians or “advanced practice providers.” Id. at 38-39. Under the governing 17 standard, Plaintiffs received sufficient notice, as the question of which types of 18 providers and/or staff may engage with and provide information to patients was 19 squarely presented. Indeed, HHS initially proposed to allow only physicians to 20 provide nondirective counseling, see 83 Fed. Reg. at 25,531; 25,507; 25,518, but, 21 in response to comments, decided to allow both physicians and APPs to offer 22 nondirective counseling, 84 Fed. Reg. at 7761. Because this question was

1 presented, and HHS adopted a less restrictive approach in response to comments, 2 Plaintiffs' notice-and-comment claim is meritless. Indeed, a district court in a 3 related challenge to the Rule rejected a materially indistinguishable logical-4 outgrowth challenge to the same provision. See California v. Azar, 385 F. Supp.
5 3d 960, 1020-21 (N.D. Cal. 2019).

6 IV. PLAINTIFFS' CONSTITUTIONAL CLAIMS ARE MERITLESS

7 As explained in Defendants' opening brief, Plaintiffs' constitutional claims 8 fail in light of Rust. See Defs.' MSJ at 42-46. Plaintiffs do not seriously contest
9 Defendants' arguments, instead contending that the Court need not reach 10 Plaintiffs' constitutional claims because alleged "statutory violations are so 11 pervasive." NFPRHA MSJ at 75; Wash. MSJ at 70. As argued above, that is not 12 the case. And to the extent Washington does attempt to justify its constitutional 13 claims, its arguments are meritless.

14 A. The Rule Does Not Violate the First Amendment

15 Although Plaintiffs do not dispute that Rust remains good law, they contend 16 that the decision "left open" the question of whether "traditional relationships such 17 as that between doctor and patient should enjoy protection under the First 18 Amendment in the context of a government-subsidized health care program." 19 Wash. MSJ at 70. But as Plaintiffs cannot help but acknowledge, the Supreme 20 Court nonetheless rejected the First Amendment challenge because the 1988 21 "regulations do not significantly impinge upon the doctor-patient relationship." 22 Rust, 500 U.S. at 200. Plaintiffs suggest that the nondirective provision has

1 fundamentally altered the nature of the Title X program, such that what was true
2 in 1988—i.e., that “the doctor-patient relationship established by the Title X 3 program [is not] sufficiently all encompassing so as to justify an expectation on 4 the part of the patient of comprehensive medical advice” and that “a doctor’s 5 silence with regard to abortion cannot reasonably be thought to mislead a client 6 into thinking that the doctor does not consider abortion an appropriate option for 7 her,” id.—is no longer true today. See Wash. MSJ at 70-71. But Plaintiffs again 8 vastly overstate the importance of the appropriations rider and its impact on the 9 Title X program, which remains fundamentally the same today as it was when 10 Rust held that substantially similar regulations did not violate the First 11 Amendment. Accordingly, as in Rust, “the general rule that the Government may 12 choose not to subsidize speech applies with full force.” Rust, 500 U.S. at 200.

13 Plaintiffs attempt to rely on the Supreme Court’s recent decision in National 14 Institute of Family & Life Advocates v. Becerra, 138 S. Ct. 2361 (2018) (NIFLA)
15 to undermine the applicability of Rust to this case. See Wash. MSJ at 70-71. That 16 decision, however, did not address government subsidization of speech at all, but 17 a law purporting to compel certain pregnancy clinics to provide particular notices.
18 See 138 S. Ct. at 2368-78. It did not even mention Rust, which is unsurprising 19 given the settled rule that, as a general matter, “if a party objects to a condition on 20 the receipt of federal funding, its recourse is to decline the funds,” even “when the 21 objection is that a condition may affect the recipient’s exercise of its First 22 Amendment rights.” Agency for Int’l Dev. v. All. for Open Soc’y Int’l, Inc.

1 (AOSI), 570 U.S. 205, 214 (2013) (collecting cases). In any event, even if NIFLA
2 could somehow be read as calling Rust into question—which it cannot—Rust
3 would still be binding here. See Rodriguez de Quijas v. Shearson/Am. Exp., Inc., 4 490 U.S. 477, 484 (1989) (“If a precedent of this Court has direct application in a 5 case, yet appears to rest on reasons rejected in some other line of decisions, the 6 [lower court] should follow the case which directly controls, leaving to this Court 7 the prerogative of overruling its own decisions.”).

8 Plaintiffs also contend that the Rule “interferes with Title X recipients’ 9 activities outside the Title X program.” Wash. MSJ at 71. Plaintiffs do not 10 explain, however, how the Rule differs from the 1988 regulations, which the 11 Supreme Court upheld against an unconstitutional conditions challenge after 12 concluding that the regulations “govern the scope of the Title X project’s 13 activities, and leave the grantee unfettered in its other activities.” Rust, 500 U.S.
14 at 196-97. Thus, Rust controls this argument, and AOSI, which explicitly 15 reaffirmed Rust, is not to the contrary, as Plaintiffs suggest, Wash. MSJ at 71-72.

16 B. The Rule Is Not Unconstitutionally Vague

17 Nor is the Rule unconstitutionally vague, for the reasons explained in 18 Defendants’ opening brief. See Defs. MSJ at 43-45. Plaintiffs do not respond to 19 Defendants’ arguments, other than to contend that 42 C.F.R. § 59.7(b), apparently 20 by itself, “presents independent constitutional issues.” Wash. MSJ at 72-73.
21 What Plaintiffs challenge, though, is the conditions that provision sets forth for 22 the Secretary’s review of applications for discretionary agency grants. They

1 ignore the fundamental point, as Defendants have explained, that this case arises 2 in “the context of selective subsidies” rather than an exercise of the government’s 3 coercive regulatory authority. Nat’l Endowment for the Arts v. Finley, 524 U.S.
4 569, 589 (1998). As such, the “consequences of imprecision are not 5 constitutionally severe.” Id.

6 In any event, Plaintiffs’ vagueness challenge to the purported “all-7 encompassing, uncertain eligibility” requirement, Wash. MSJ at 72, is meritless 8 because that provision merely requires that entities address, in their applications, 9 how they intend to “satisfy the requirements” of the Rule, which requirements are 10 not themselves vague. The separation requirements based on a review of all the 11 facts and circumstances are the same as those set forth in the 1988 regulations
12 (and upheld in Rust) and the Rule elsewhere provides extensive guidance 13 regarding compliance with the Rule’s counseling provisions. See, e.g., 84 Fed.
14 Reg. at 7747 (offering “guidance on the requirement of nondirective pregnancy 15 counseling”); 42 C.F.R. § 59.16(b) (providing eight examples to illustrate what is 16 permissible and what is prohibited with respect to counseling). The Rule is not 17 unconstitutionally vague.

18 V. THE COURT SHOULD AWAIT GUIDANCE ON THE MERITS
19 FROM THE NINTH CIRCUIT

20 Defendants are entitled to judgment in their favor, and Plaintiffs’ motion 21 should be denied, for the reasons explained above and in Defendants’ prior briefs.
22 However, even if there were any doubt, or if the Court were to believe that

1 Plaintiffs’ arguments have merit, the Court should await guidance from the Ninth 2 Circuit before ruling.

3 As the Court is aware, a motions panel of the Ninth Circuit issued a 4 unanimous per curiam order on June 20, 2019 staying this Court’s preliminary 5 injunction—along with the two other injunction issued by district courts in Oregon
6 and California—pending appeal. See California v. Azar, 927 F.3d 1068 (9th Cir.
7 2019). It concluded that HHS is likely to prevail on the merits and that the 8 equitable factors cut in the Department’s favor. Id. at 1075-80. The panel 9 emphasized that the Rule is “reasonable and in accord with § 1008,” as confirmed 10 by Rust. Id. at 1075. It also concluded that Plaintiffs are unlikely to succeed on 11 their claim that the Rule is arbitrary and capricious. Id. at 1079-80.

12 Plaintiffs moved for en banc reconsideration of the panel’s stay order, 13 which was granted. See Washington v. Azar, No. 19-35394, Order (July 3, 2019).
14 The en banc panel of the Ninth Circuit initially ordered that the motions panel 15 decision not be cited as precedent, id., but later clarified that the panel’s stay order 16 had not been vacated and denied the Plaintiffs’ motions for an administrative stay 17 of the stay order, Washington v. Azar, No. 19-35394, Order (July 11, 2019). The 18 en banc panel then scheduled oral argument and instructed the parties to “be 19 prepared to discuss . . . the district courts’ preliminary injunction orders on the 20 merits.” Washington v. Azar, No. 19-35394, Order (Aug. 1, 2019). The panel 21 heard argument on September 23, 2019, which addressed the merits of the 22 preliminary injunction orders.

1 dismiss or, in the alternative, for summary judgment; deny Plaintiffs' motions for 2 summary judgment; and enter summary judgment in Defendants' favor.¹²

15 ¹² If the Court ultimately disagrees with Defendants and decides to award
16 Plaintiffs summary judgment with respect to any of their claims, the scope of relief 17 should be limited. Defendants dispute that the extreme remedy of vacatur is 18 proper in this case, see NFPRHA MSJ at 75, and submit, as they have previously 19 argued, that any remedial order (vacatur included) should be no broader than 20 necessary to provide Plaintiffs relief, and should therefore extend only to the 21 Plaintiffs and only to the specific provisions of the Rule that the Court finds 22 unlawful. See Defs.' PI Opp'n at 60-66.
